Global Technology strategy

Weaker markets in November but prospects for our Technology companies remain strong

- The technology sector outperformed the broader equity index in November
- Our semiconductor holdings were strong during the month
- Q3 2021 earnings season: our companies have reported mostly better than expected results

Portfolio Manager, Global Technology strategy

What's happening?

During November, the MSCI World index gained 1.4%¹. The technology sector outperformed the broader equity index with the MSCI World Information Technology index climbing 6.3%¹ [All index returns provided in GBP].

Portfolio positioning and performance

Our best performing investments during the month included New Relic, a provider of application performance monitoring (APM) software tools which performed well after reporting results ahead of expectations demonstrating that their sales model transition is getting good acceptance by customers.

Our semiconductor holdings continued to perform well in November following a strong October for the sector. Qualcomm reported good results and showed continued success in broadening its exposure outside of Apple in to other areas like IoT² and Automotive. AMD a leading semiconductor companies exposed to High Performance computing and Artificial Intelligence performed well as results continue to come in strongly and after announcing that Facebook (or “Meta” as the company is now known) was using their chips in its data centers. Facebook is increasingly focussing on developing the Metaverse (the concept of a virtual world layered over the physical world). At the same time, they announced that CAPEX³ for 2022 would be 29-34bn USD, up from 19bn in 2021⁴, focussed on investments in data centers, servers and network infrastructure. This significant CAPEX³ plan has been supportive for companies like AMD exposed to this area.

⁴ Facebook Third Quarter 2021 Results, 25/10/2021

We saw weaker performance from video games developer Activision Blizzard, after announcing delays of two games that were expected to be released in 2022 and misconduct accusations directed at the CEO. We are monitoring the situation. We also saw weaker performance from the digital payment company PayPal after communicating a cautious guidance but we think the secular growth tailwinds from the company are unchanged. Other payment names such as Visa and Global Payments also weakened as the new Coronavirus variant is putting payment volumes in doubt.

During the month we sold our remaining position in Alibaba, due a combination of a slowdown in their business coupled with the current regulatory environment in China.

Outlook

Equity markets had continued to recover in November supported by robust earnings results. However a combination of the emergence of a new strain of Covid-19 (Omicron) and some dovish comments from the Chair of the Federal Reserve, Jerome Powell, resulted in a sharp sell off at the end of the month which coincided with the US Thanksgiving holiday.

At the time of writing, for those companies in the MSCI World Index (representing the broader equity market) that have reported their third-quarter numbers, 63% have reported better-than-expected revenues and 70% reported better-than-expected earnings. For the technology component of the same index, the results were 69% and 78%, respectively and for the Fund, these figures are 70% and 86%, respectively. (Source: Bloomberg)

Whilst we are mindful of rotations within investment and equity markets, we continue to view these pullbacks as a buying opportunity particularly for those companies that have long term drivers of growth and a good track record of execution.

Past performance is not a guide to current or future performance, and any performance or return data displayed does not take into account commissions and costs incurred when issuing or redeeming units. The value of investments, and the income from them, can fall as well as rise and investors may not get back the amount originally invested. Exchange-rate fluctuations may also affect the value of their investment. Due to this and the initial charge that is usually made, an investment is not usually suitable as a short term holding.
